

Delegation Name: Republic of Argentina

Ambassador Name: Su Arseven

Dear delegates, esteemed chairboard, as the ambassador of Argentina we would like to express our gratitude for being here, at this prestigious conference, debating issues that concern us all and that risk worldwide peace.

Daron Acemoğlu started his book “Why Nations Fail?” with these sentences “The city of Nogales is divided into two distinct sections...difference is that many Nogales, Arizona residents see themselves as citizens of the U.S., and they participate in elections, changing their local representatives, senators, and even the president. In contrast, Nogales Sonora residents do not have these privileges.” Their cultures are nearly the same, their history is almost identical, and they come from the same ancestors. However, one side of the Nogales region is living in peace and the other doesn't know peace's definition.

But what if we used our differences to analyze problems from opposite perspectives, to solve issues that not only concern us, but our community? We should focus on using our differences to realize details we forget or don't see. As the Nobel Laureate expressed, “True peace is not merely the absence of conflict, but the presence of institutions that allow for inclusive participation, fairness, and the rule of law, which sustain societies through their most challenging times.”
